

Acknowledgments

The National Technical Assistance Center for State Mental Health Planning is proud to coordinate this training curriculum, which is taken wholly from the National Executive Training Institute: Creating Violence Free and Coercion Free Mental Health Treatment Environments for the Reduction of Seclusion and Restraint. We wish to acknowledge the leadership and support we have received from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), Center for Mental Health Services (CMHS), under the direction of Charles Curie, A.C.S.W., SAMHSA Administrator; Gail P. Hutchings, M.P.A, former acting director of CMHS; and Joyce Berry, Ph.D., J.D., director of the Division of State & Community Systems Development, CMHS.

Together, Kevin Ann Huckshorn, R.N., M.S.N., director of the National Technical Assistance Center for State Mental Health Planning (NTAC), and Steven J. Karp, D.O., former chief psychiatric officer, Office of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services (PA), provided a collective vision that guided the development of this national initiative from its inception. The core components of this training curriculum were identified and refined from discussion at the National Experts Meeting on the Reduction and Elimination of Seclusion and Restraint, held September 25-26, 2002 in Alexandria, VA.

We thank the members of the National Executive Training Institute faculty who drafted, reviewed, and provided ongoing feedback on the content of the training modules and the format of the curriculum. This was a grueling task and the contributions made by these dedicated professionals have resulted in the creation of the first comprehensive “promising practices” blueprint to reduce the use of seclusion and restraint in public mental health settings. Among those who participated in this work are: Gayle Bluebird, R.N.; Beth Caldwell, M.A.; Tina Champagne, M.Ed., OTR/L; Kenneth Duckworth, M.D.; Brian Farragher, M.S.W.; Rupert Goetz, M.D.; Robert Goldstein, Ph.D.; Gordon Hodas, M.D.; Kevin Ann Huckshorn, R.N., M.S.N., C.A.P.; W. Russell Hughes, Ph.D., M.B.A.; Joyce Jorgenson, B.A.; Steven J. Karp, D.O.; Tom Lane; Janice Le Bel, Ph.D.; Mary Ann Nihart, M.A., A.R.N.P., C.S.; Robert Quam, M.A., C.B.H.E.; Glenn Saxe, M.D.; Lucille Schacht, Ph.D.; and Nan Stromberg, R.N., C.S.

In addition, we must acknowledge the contributions of those people around the country who sent information about successful seclusion and restraint reduction projects including example policies, guidelines, tools, procedures, and lessons learned, and who, in many cases, have allowed us to share this information. We also recognize the contributions of all of the authors who have conducted the research on trauma, violence, coercion, and seclusion and restraint use over the past two decades. The reference lists of each of the training modules catalogue their efforts.

Finally, we thank the staff of the National Association of State Mental Health Program Directors who assisted in all aspects of this project, especially the leadership of Robert Glover, Ph.D., executive director of NASMHPD, and Noel Mazade, Ph.D., executive director of the NASMHPD Research Institute, Inc. (NRI). The NTAC staff put in long hours planning the National Executive Training Institutes as well as editing and preparing the curriculum.

We dedicate this curriculum to our colleagues and to the children and adults served in inpatient mental health treatment environments. It is our great hope that these training institutes will assist all of us to move closer to a mental health service system that is defined by the values of respect, collaboration, and true partnership with those we serve and is based on the science of trauma informed care.
